Many vaccines are available for use in dogs, but not every pet needs every available vaccine. We utilize the guidelines set forth by the AAHA (American Animal Hospital Association) and AAFP (American Association of Feline Practitioners) as we consider your pet's vaccines. Some vaccines are considered core vaccines and should be administered to all pets, whereas other vaccines are optional and may be recommended for pets based on a variety of factors, such as their risk for exposure to disease. Vaccine recommendations can also change throughout a pet's life, as travel habits and other variables change. We will consider all these factors as we determine which vaccines your pet should have.

Vaccines help pets live longer, healthier lives. Protecting your dog is our primary goal, so developing an appropriate vaccine schedule for your pet is important to us. Call us today to set up an appointment to discuss your pet's vaccination needs

We recommend the following Core Vaccinations for Canines:

Adult Dog

- Canine Distemper
- Canine Parvovirus
- Hepatitis
- Canine Rabies

Based on your dog's lifestyle circumstances and exposure, Non-Core Vaccinations include:

- Bordetella – commonly known as “Kennel Cough”, an upper respiratory infection
- Leptospirosis – transmitted by wildlife, often times while camping and hiking
- Lyme Vaccine – transmitted by ticks
- Canine Influenza (Canine Flu) – respiratory infection
